DIRECTOR'S NOTE

Could Gilbert or Sullivan ever have imagined that their works would be alive and well some 130 years later and providing so much joy to us all in Minnesota in the dead of winter?

Princess Ida; or, Castle Adamant opened on January 5, 1884 and was the eighth operatic collaboration for Gilbert and Sullivan. It nestled between Iolanthe and The Mikado – two of their biggest successes. By comparison, Princess Ida was not an enormous hit. But its longevity is a testament to its many charms. In 1985, I played my first lead in a G&S show – Hilarion in Carleton College's production. About eight years later, I sang the role again with this very company in the 1993 production. So, this show holds a special place in my heart. Its enduring power might seem odd given that it deals with difficult topics: the satirization of Victorian feminism, college education for women (a novelty at the time), and Darwin's theory of evolution (only a few decades old when the show opened). Any one of these topics could pose challenges for a modern audience. Thankfully, Gilbert treated the topics with a light touch; in fact, the show pokes more fun at male foolishness and chauvinism than anything else.

Princess Ida is based on a narrative poem by Tennyson called The Princess (1847). Gilbert had written a farcical musical play, based on the poem, in 1870 and lifted much of the dialogue from it for his operetta. It is the only Gilbert and Sullivan opera in three acts and the only one with dialogue in blank verse (unrhymed iambic pentameter). It has been noted – and I agree – that the dialogue sometimes fails to sparkle in the usual Gilbertian way as a result of the forced meter. Happily, the score and lyrics more than make up for any shortcomings in the somewhat stilted dialogue.

It should be noted that we have adapted the play very slightly to address a notable challenge in the original: the play's conclusion includes a significant reversal. The ending is forced and somewhat jarring – especially to the modern ear. We've added just a few lines in Act 2 and 3 to help Ida's change of heart seem more plausible. Many of these new lines are actually from the original Tennyson poem which handles the conclusion in a far less perfunctory way.

I hope you enjoy this production even half as much as we have enjoyed putting it together for you. I feel extremely fortunate to have been able to work with such a profoundly talented, collaborative, dedicated and buoyant cast, crew, orchestra, music director and board.

I hope you'll agree that it's especially important right now, right here, to support art that brings beauty and joy – the wellsprings of hope – into the world. If you agree, perhaps you'll consider a contribution to this unique Twin Cities company that dedicates itself solely to this special brand of operetta that we all hold so dear.

SYNOPSIS

Act I King Hildebrand and his court await the coming of Princess Ida who was betrothed in infancy to Prince Hilarion. However, Ida's father, King Gama, and her three brothers arrive without her. They explain that she rules a women's university where no men are allowed. King Hildebrand takes King Gama and his sons hostage while Prince Hilarion and his two friends set off to lay romantic siege to Ida's castle.

Act II The women at Castle Adamant are learning to "abjure tyrannic man," under the tutelage of Princess Ida, Lady Psyche, and Lady Blanche. Hildebrand, Cyril, and Florian sneak in and disguise themselves as new students. However, the men must take Florian's sister, Lady Psyche, into their confidence. Melissa, Lady Blanche's daughter, thrilled to see men, also keeps their secret. She persuades her mother not to tell Ida, but Cyril soon gives away the truth after drinking too much at luncheon. Hilarion rescues Ida after she falls into the stream, but she arrests "these coarse, intruding spies." King Hildebrand arrives with his force of warriors. Ida defies him, even though he threatens to kill her brothers if she will not marry Hilarion.

Act III Melissa leads the women in a rallying war song, but they are all somewhat nervous about fighting. The princess agrees to let her brothers fight Hilarion, Cyril, and Florian—and to marry Hilarion if he wins. Ida's strong (but not so bright) brothers discard their heavy armor before the fight and, predictably, lose. Ida and Hilarion discover common ground for a happy, Gilbertian ending.
